CELERY FOR EASTERN PEOPLE.

Great Quantities Are Shipped
Through Akron.

Great quantities of celery are shipped through Akron each night to the East. Two two-horse express wagons are required to haul the celery from the Howard st. station to the Union station. The shipments come from Greentown and other stations on the Valley railroad between Akron and Canton. Most of the celery goes to Pittsburgh commission houses. There is about an average crop this year.

BLAME PLACED

By Coroner E. O. Leberman In the Durant Case.

The Technical Points of Law Were Not, However, Violated by Elders.

Coroner E. O. Leberman has filed his verdict in the case of the death of Geo. Durant, a Barberton young man, who died of pneumonia, and who was not attended by a regular physician. The verdict follows:

After examining the body and taking the testimony, I find that the deceased came to his death from pneumonia and peritonitis. I find that several days prior to his death he went to the house of an Elder of the Christian Alliance denomination in Barberton, and asked him to pray for his restoration to health. I find that the aforesaid Elder invited him to remain in his house and did there anoint and pray for him after the manner laid down in the 5th chapter of James. I find that twenty-four hours prior to his death, another Elder in the church took him from the house and walked with him a considerable distance, which exercise, in my opinion was highly detrimental to the patient. I am not able to ascertain, nor do I believe, that any compensation was offered by the deceased or received by the persons under whose care he placed himself. I can therefore find no violation of any existing statute regarding the practice of medicine. I do however find, that the care and treatment accorded the young man were not such as are accepted by the medical profession as good and careful treatment, and which would not be held as such by any court of law had his death occurred under the supervision of a regularly licensed practitioner. While one may respect the good intentions and believe the sincerity of this and other allied cults, out of justice to those who are legally qualified to administer to the sick, and for the protection of the public at large, the latter at the best inadequately informed upon the subject of disease and its proper treatment, I am constrained to say that the representatives of these systems for the relief and cure of disease which are not recognized by the state examining board should certainly be held as responsible for their acts as those entitled to its recognition.

Medical legislation was not enacted for the benefit of any school or system of healing, but for the good and welfare of the public whose protection from the charlatan, the unskilled, the ignorant and the unscrupulous was aimed at. It can therefore be considered no abridgement of personal liberty to insist that the provisions of such well-intended legislation be carried out. The services of these people may be rendered gratuitously and with the full consent and cooperation of the patient, but the danger of those unrecognized systems of healing lies not so much in the sins of omission as it does in the sins of commission. The value of the true physician to the public lies not only in his ability to successfully treat disease, but in the knowledge which enables him to advise means for its prevention. It is in this latter connection that the so called new schools of healing such as "Faith-Cure," "Christian Science," "Dowsing" and "dozens of other isms are an absolute menace to the public welfare. With little or no knowledge of anatomy or pathology and an absolute disregard for symptomatology and the rules of diagnosis, contagious diseases of all kinds, which the careful, painstaking study of the medical profession has reduced by its insistence of the laws governing communicable diseases, to a wonderful extent, may again through the ignorance of this class attain their former prevalence and corresponding mortality. The spread of contagious diseases is but one of the evils, which the public may expect from a toleration of these cults. Diseases of a non-contagious type, curable often in their incipency, are unrecognized or overlooked until the disease has made such inroads as to make it no longer amenable to treatment. Hygienic laws are disregarded and all that experience and research have taught the medical profession since the time of Aesculapius, are often utterly ignored. It is not within the province of this office to discuss wherein the errors only too willing to meet Simms before our intention to detract from the value of mental impression in the treatment of disease. "The faith that heals" has been observed by every physician since the time of Galen, and the efficacy of prayer may only be doubted by the skeptic and atheist.

WITH BRUTISH COURAGE AND WITHOUT HOPE OR PRAYER.

reached the prison Supt. Collins conveyed their request for an interview to the prisoner. Czolgosz sent back word that he did not care to see them, but the priests asked to be allowed to go to him despite his refusal. Supt. Collins consented, and personally escorted them to the cell. The priests remained with Czolgosz for three-quarters of an hour, and earnestly pleaded with the prisoner to repent and pray for divine forgiveness. He rejected all their advances, however, and they regretfully withdrew. They told the prisoner they would hold themselves ready to answer a call from him at any hour of the night. It was 7 o'clock when Supt. Collins went into the death house and tried to get the prisoner to talk to him. Although he remained in the cell some time he was apparently not successful in getting anything material from him.

At 8 o'clock a brother and brother-in-law arrived, and Supt. Collins took them down to the condemned man's cell. There was no demonstration when they met. Czolgosz merely stepped to the front of his steel cage and said: "Hello." The brother ventured the remark: "I wish you would tell us, Leon, who got you into this scrape."

The assassin answered in a slow, hesitating manner, "No one; nobody had anything to do with it but me." "That is not how you were brought up," said the brother, "and you ought to tell us everything now." "I haven't got anything to tell," he answered in a surly manner. "Do you want to see the priests again?" asked his brother. And he answered with more vehemence than he had previously shown: "No, — them, don't send them here again; I don't want them."

The brother-in-law interjected here: "That's right, Leon." The brother looked rather disturbed by the answer. Then stepping up close to the bars, the condemned man said: "And don't you have any praying over me when I'm dead. I don't want it. I don't want any of their — religion."

There was a painful pause of a few minutes and then the relatives resumed casual conversation with him, to which he replied in monosyllables, until the brother-in-law suggested, much to Supt. Collins' surprise, that he and the brother be permitted to witness the execution. Before Supt. Collins could reply Leon Czolgosz said:

"Yes, Mr. Superintendent, let them see me killed."

Supt. Collins told the trio in emphatic terms that no such thing could be allowed and ordered them to say good-bye.

Czolgosz walked to the back of his cell, sat down on the edge of his cot and did not answer the last farewell. When the relatives arrived at the warden's office they again renewed their request to see the execution, to which Mr. Collins replied: "Emphatically no. Czolgosz will be killed at 7 o'clock tomorrow and if you apply to the warden in the afternoon you may be able to see the body."

The two men were then let out of the prison. Czolgosz' conduct last evening was brutish.

The approach of death seemed to awaken no greater consciousness of his position. He again turned his back upon the priests who came to urge him to confess and repent and was undemonstrative in the presence of those of his kin who came to say a last farewell to him.

When alone with his guards he remained silent and passed the time either lying on his bunk or in slowly pacing up and down the cell. He talked, when addressed, to those admitted near his cell, but with his old deliberation and slowness. If he felt strong emotion at any time he was successful in concealing it from those who watched over him.

The prisoner combated the suggestion that his stillness was a daze of fear and that the hour of the execution would find him helplessly broken down. He suffered no loss of appetite and during the day ate the usual allowance of food given to prisoners. Throughout his entire confinement he has had a good appetite and his physical condition has been excellent. He weighs about 155 pounds, which was thought to represent a slight gain since his arrest.

Walter N. Thayer, former warden of Dannemora prison, who was requested by Supt. Collins to assist and advise Warden Mead during the execution, arrived yesterday. He inspected the death chamber and chair and suggested an improvement in the latter, which was made at once. He found that the bars on the back of the chair were rather far apart and expressed the opinion that an upright back board placed inside the bars would strengthen the grip of the condemned man. The suggestion was adopted.

The resolution of Superintendent Collins to prevent sensation in the transportation and burial or cremation of the body of Czolgosz took new zest from two offers that were substituted Monday by men of questionable enterprise. A museum keeper in one of the large cities telegraphed an offer of $5,000 spot cash for either the body or the garments of the murderer, and the owner of a kinetoscope wired Warden Mead that he would pay $2,000 for permission to take a moving picture of Czolgosz entering the death chamber.

The Superintendent also had his suspicions aroused as to the motives of some of the relatives of Czolgosz, in seeking the body in view of their poverty and the trouble and danger possible in connection with its removal and disposal.

The Superintendent chanced to meet Waldeck Czolgosz, brother of the murderer, as he was being escorted to the death cell, shortly after his arrival, and at once took the matter up with him. He asked Czolgosz if he wanted the body. He said he did. Collins then told him that he did not believe that it could be removed without serious trouble and strongly advised him against the attempt. The plan to take it to Buffalo, where Czolgosz had assassinated the President, he regarded as particularly dangerous.

Collins discussed the matter from the standpoint of the Czolgosz family and said they would surely avoid serious annoyance and possibly violence by consenting to burial here. He assured Waldeck Czolgosz that he and the family could attend, and that they would be given decent burial. Czolgosz was obstinate, however, and Collins finally told him that if there was a well grounded suspicion as to the motive in claiming the body he would refuse to surrender it law or no law. Czolgosz then seemed inclined to give in, and went with the Superintendent to the office of Warden Mead, where a paper relinquishing all claim upon the body was drawn up.

RIPANS

Quick Lunches

Are apt to cause indigestion or any one of numerous other stomach ills. Nevertheless they are a convenience and perhaps a necessity. It is foolish, however, to endure needless pain and discomfort arising from them. Every man and woman engaged in office work and accustomed to eat quick lunches, should carry a 5-cent carton of Ripans Tablets and take one after eating to counteract the bad effect of the doughnuts, pie, sandwiches, coffee or other indigestible food. It will afford instant and lasting relief and help the stomach to get out of the food whatever good there may be in it.
